On the Water

with
BRI ANDRASSY

Sea-Doo Ambassador

“It’s way different than being on a boat—you feel the fish, the way that it fights, you’re closer to it, you feel its every move”

BRI ANDRASSY

It’s Friday morning in late May, and Bri Andrassy is headed to the coast. While most people who work a full-time job would use the weekend to kick their feet up, Bri is up to something different—she’s off to spend the weekend casting for trophy fish, spearfishing for dinner, and spending long days on the water—nothing out of the ordinary for the 28-year-old nursing studies teacher.

But for those who know Bri, out of the ordinary is the norm for the marlin-dreaming, gator-chasing New Jersey native. At the age of three, she caught her first flounder on a Mickey Mouse rod, a gift from her fishing-obsessed father. From that moment on, she was hooked on the limitless opportunities the ocean offered. After chasing that ethos down to Florida, while simultaneously pursuing a doctorate in Nursing Studies, she’s become about as close as you can get to a full-fledged mermaid.

For many, long days on the water hunting for big fish might seem like a full-time job. For Bri it’s the ultimate escape, and it runs deep in the family.

“My grandfather was a prisoner of war in the Second World War. He had some pretty significant trauma coming back from that, and fishing was therapeutic for him—it’s what kept him sane, I think.”

While she didn’t need a stint as a P.O.W. to get hooked, after 15-hour days working in the medical field, Bri too has found solace beyond the shorelines. With a lifetime of experience on the water, she’s taken unwinding to a level that most can only dream of—chasing trophy fish, exploring waterways of all shapes and sizes, and diving headfirst into the world of spearfishing.

On one of her late spring weekend adventures, Bri was chasing the lifelong goal of bagging an alligator.

“I’ve been trying on a kayak for a while, but it’s tough to keep up with them,” Andrassy said.

When she was awarded one of the limited number of tags to fish and hunt for the gators at Lake Okeechobee, a freshwater lake just inland from the coastal community of Palm Beach, she leaped at the opportunity. The best part? She could use her Sea-Doo this time around. So after another long week of work she headed west with it in tow.

“I had two days to scout,” said Andrassy, “and then the last day to really go for it.” With a tight timeline and a lifetime of pent-up anticipation, she aimed to make the most of her permit.

“In Florida, you can’t hunt during the nighttime hours with a Sea-Doo because you can’t be on the water at night. So I had like a three-hour window in the morning and a three-hour window in the evening.”

With the same tenacity that she tackles everything in life plus a little bit of luck, Bri managed to wrangle an alligator, adding another trophy to her ever-growing case.

For every fish caught, however, there’s another one out there that she hasn’t reeled in. When you’re practically born with a rod in your hand like Bri, that’s what keeps you coming back. With dreams of chasing down fish in Hawaii and Panama, she still has plenty of plans to keep growing her skills on the water—and a lot of those goals revolve around using a Sea-Doo for access.

“It’s way different than being on a boat—you feel the fish, the way that it fights, you’re closer to it, you feel its every move,” Andrassy said.

While not everyone can be an alligator wrangler like Bri, there’s plenty of fish in the sea—and the lakes and rivers for that matter, and you don’t need to start at age three like Andrassy. Just grab a rod and get out there.

To join in on Bri Andrassy’s adventures and learn more about the machine she rides, head over to her ambassador page at www.sea-doo.com.

RICARDO MARTINS

DESTINATION

Pantanal Dreaming

ON HIS SEA-DOO, PHOTOGRAPHER RICARDO MARTINS CHASES A DREAM TO PHOTOGRAPH THE ELUSIVE PANTANAL JAGUAR DEEP IN THE JUNGLE.

Ricardo Martins grew up with a dream. Raised in the countryside outside São Paulo, Brazil, and spending most of his time outdoors, something clicked when Ricardo photographed his first vine snake at the age of 10—he wanted to be a nature photographer.

But it wasn't until his frequent trips to the Pantanal region, his father's childhood home, that Ricardo truly understood how far he wanted to go. He would photograph the elusive Pantanal jaguar, and he would stop at nothing to do it.

World renowned for its biodiversity, the Pantanal region of Brazil sits somewhere between 140,000 and 195,000 square kilometers (54,000 and 75,000 square miles) in size, and it's mostly wetlands, with over 80% of it submerged during rainy seasons. That, combined with a thick jungle and a notoriously elusive animal, has made it difficult for Ricardo to capture a coveted photo of the jaguar. Until now.

“I've always dreamed about photographing the jaguar—it's such a mighty animal,” Ricardo said.

After years and years of going back to the region, Ricardo was having trouble tracking the animal. Because of its reclusive nature, and the dense, forested terrain crisscrossed by complex waterways, he needed to find a way to move quickly through the area—not so differently from the jaguar itself. The answer to his problems? To get on the water and start his search along the shores.

“We needed a watercraft to navigate the rivers, because finding the jaguar and capturing the picture from the water is much easier, as the visibility of the animals by the riverbanks is better,” Ricardo said. “It was important to have a reliable watercraft that could take me alone and safely face to face with the jaguar.”

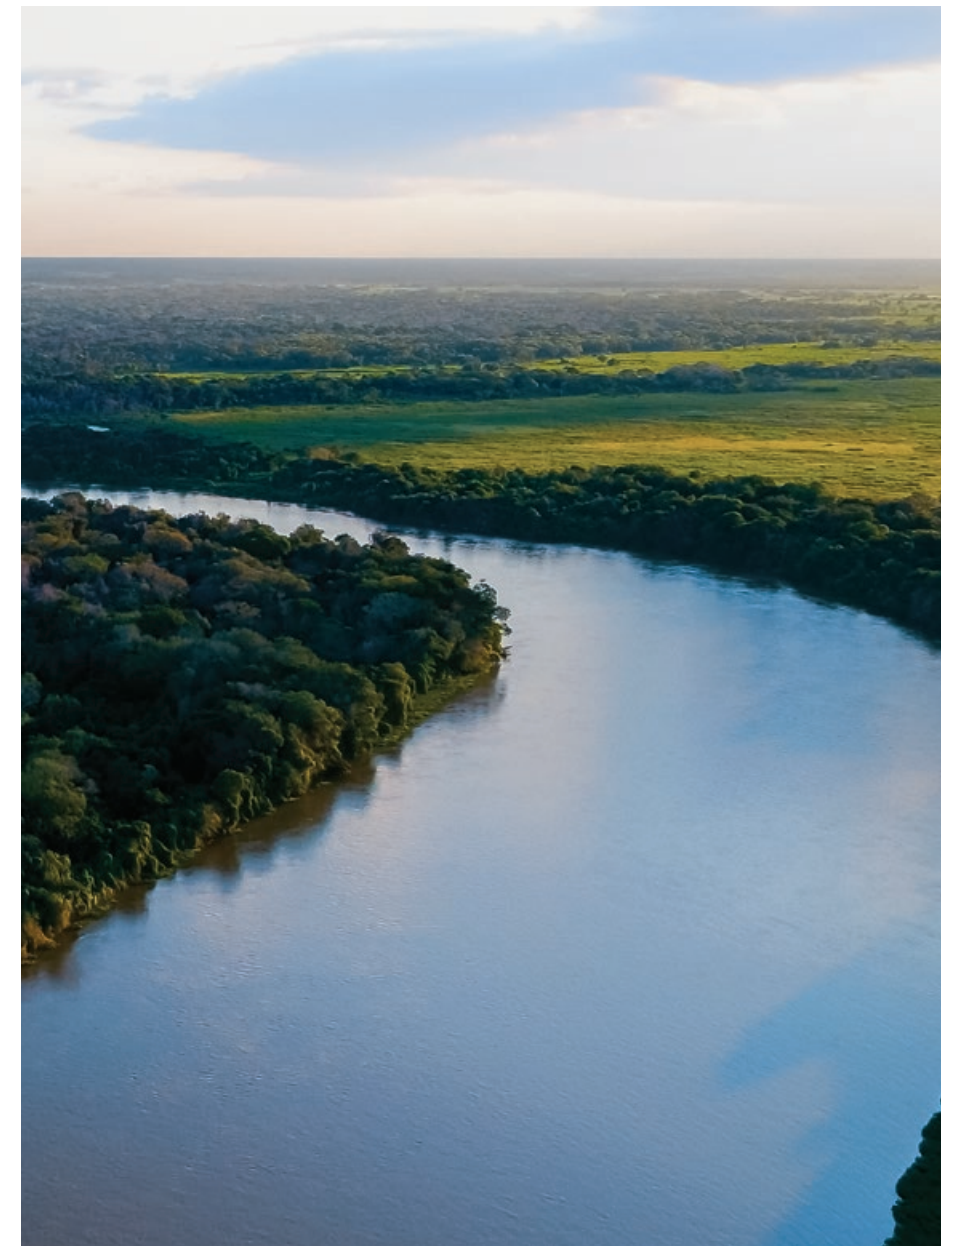

He found the perfect watercraft in a Sea-Doo, which enabled him to move nimbly through the waterways and live this adventure, helping him in his quest to shoot the jaguar in impossible terrain.

But it wasn't without hiccups. With fast-flowing waters, and the need to position himself on the Sea-Doo with his camera at a moment's notice, there were plenty of tense situations as Ricardo tried to chase down his dream.

“I had to really take control of the situation—the river's flow, the Sea-Doo, the camera. I had to make those elements a single extension of myself,” Ricardo said.

“But once I understood how to work it, enjoying the safety and agility of it, I was able to reach a level of creative freedom I never had.”

Eventually, Ricardo was able to achieve his goal.

“I'll never forget the first time she crossed my eyes, when I really saw her eyes into mine. I dreamed about it! I saw those yellow eyes in front of me, staring at me. That photo turned out incredible!”

While capturing the photo was a dream, it was the journey that counted—and the culture of the people in the Pantanal region was something that truly stuck out to Ricardo. While the photo is the end goal, it's those who help you achieve it and the lessons you learn along the way that are important.

“I love meeting and talking with local people from the region,” Ricardo said.

“To me, that's pure photography, pure feelings—that's the real Pantanal!”

Tanker Boys

with
NICK TAYLOR

Sea-Doo Ambassador

“Growing up, I’m sure at some point I made a mental note to go try tanker surfing.”

NICK TAYLOR

HARNESSING THE POWER OF TANKERS AND DODGING SHARKS, NICK TAYLOR AND CO. CATCH A WAVE IN AN UNFAMILIAR LOCALE.

When it comes to riding a wave anywhere on Planet Earth, being in the right place at the right time can take years of reading forecasts, understanding seasonal trends and generally, a whole lot of luck. When it comes to the niche sport of tanker surfing, things get just a little more complicated. But with a little bit of ingenuity, it can deliver the ride of a lifetime—and that’s what professional surfer Nick Taylor brings to the table.

A little known corner of the wave-riding world, tanker surfing, or riding the waves generated by the large tankers that deliver goods to the port in Galveston, Texas, has been going on since the early 1970s. Pioneered by a few hearty locals, the sport has slowly picked up in popularity in the past decade.

One way to ride these waves? The up-and-coming sport of hydrofoiling. Pioneered in Hawaii by big-wave surfers, the sport has gained immense popularity over the past decade. By utilizing technology similar to how an airplane wing flies, the sport involves riding a wakeboard or surfboard with a wing mounted to the bottom, delivering a smooth ride for the rider, who is elevated off the water’s surface.

That’s where Nick Taylor comes in. A Florida-born waterman who originally made a name for himself as a professional wakeskater, Nick hopped on the bandwagon when he heard of the new sport.

Of the many advantages of a hydrofoil, one of its most common uses is to ride waves that are not favourable for traditional surfing—and that’s where the collision of the world of tanker surfing and hydrofoiling occurs—right underneath Nick Taylor’s feet.

“Growing up, I’m sure at some point I made a mental note to go try tanker surfing,” Nick said.

“But as a surf-starved grom, it would’ve been difficult to peel my focus away from the world-famous traditional surf spots like Pipeline, Uluwatu and Kirra.”

But when this new sport came into the fold, his priorities were rearranged.

“It had never looked so appealing as it now did, viewed through the expanded filter of hydrofoil possibilities. While too mellow on the face for aggressive maneuvers on a shortboard, the tanker wakes are long, perfectly shaped power sources for riding a foil,” Nick Taylor said.

So Nick gathered a crew, with wakesport legends Parks Bonifay and Brian Grubb, along with another wake-world mainstay Guenther Oka, and headed to the small town of Galveston, Texas, on the Gulf Coast. While plenty have tackled the tanker-surfing scene, this crew was unique, in that they tackled the waves on hydrofoils. And because the tanker swells don’t generate enough power for the waves to be paddled into, the crew used their Sea-Doo Wake Pro to tow each other. This way, they could get up to speed, at which point they could let go of the tow rope and ride for miles on end—literally.

“There were times when my legs gave up a couple of miles before the wave was done trimming across the Galveston sandbars,” Nick said.

With the help of local surfer and tanker wave pioneer Capt. Joe, a local tanker captain who can read a tanker swell forecast with the best of them, the crew had the session of a lifetime—and managed to stay safe while doing so.

“We’re operating in close proximity to some of the largest machines humanity has ever built while moving at crazy speeds, and keeping in mind the massive sharks that follow closely behind every tanker/cargo ship that comes in from the open ocean,” Nick remarked.

Even with some dangers, it’s hard to not enjoy yourself when there are no crowds, plenty of waves, and a new experience that’s hardly comparable to anything else in the world of tow-surfing.

“There’s great joy to be found in trying something new and stepping outside of your normal bounds—even if you have to go to Galveston, Texas to do it.”

These are professionals with the knowledge, training and experience to be able to participate in this activity safely. Any time you go on the water, make sure your knowledge and understanding of local conditions and safety protocols are always up to date.

No Holding Back

with
ANTHONY RADETIC

Sea-Doo Ambassador

“As soon as I noticed that it was easy to get back on the Sea-Doo, I was out on the water almost every single day.”

ANTHONY RADETIC

AFTER A LIFE-CHANGING ACCIDENT, ANTHONY RADETIC NEEDED TO FIND A NEW FREEDOM, AND BEING ON THE WATER OFFERED THE PERFECT ESCAPE.

Discover more

In some ways, Anthony Radetic was born to be on the water—but it's not until you've heard his story that you'll understand why. That's because the Florida-born speed junkie's story starts in the skies.

Fulfilling a childhood dream to fly fighter planes, Anthony climbed the ranks of the U.S. Army to become a Black Hawk pilot. But his life changed forever when tragedy struck a few years into his career. An accident left Anthony paralyzed from the waist down and forced him to end his career as a pilot, eventually leading to his discharge from service.

With a gaping hole where his dream used to be, Anthony worked to fill his time, dabbling (and excelling) in cycling and alpine skiing, but there was still something missing. Anthony needed a sport where he wasn't seen as lesser. So his wife Danielle floated an idea. Why not try out PWCs? Anthony had some experience riding a Sea-Doo, but he needed to work through some logistics—particularly the big hurdle of what would happen if he fell off.

“I was always an alpha male before, so depending on someone else was hard,” Anthony said. “I guess I wanted to overcome and see where I fit in the regular world.”

“As soon as I noticed that it was easy to get back on the Sea-Doo, I was out on the water almost every single day.”

With the autonomy to operate the machine on his own, a previously closed-off world was now wide open, and Anthony leapt at the opportunity to race PWCs all over the globe, from the U.S. and the Cayman Islands to Peru and even Russia.

With a ride that has no limits and an attitude that certainly won't be holding him back, there is no limit to what Anthony can do—and he's happy to have found a machine that can let him be himself again.
